

The Hidden Rebel

THE HIDDEN REBEL

BY INDRA

Child Of Chaos: Cries, Colours and Composition

Gray-a shade and mentality. The world we live in hosts various states of mind and emotions to live in and offers innumerable ways to carry out the living of that lifetime. As a kid, I had the fortune to spend a great deal of time in the US, India and the UK. The contrasts of lifestyles impacted my view of the world deeply since the age of 7. Now, at 17, I introspect my sight of the world through my lens and an urge of mine to be "naughty" yet also "kind" which seems childish but really represents who I am-a hidden rebel.

Definition

A rebel who follows their duty within a system and opposes a systemic norm only if it disturbs them is known as a hidden rebel. They do not wish to conflict unless they sense, know and wish to abolish a practice they view as harmful. The reasons for such a boisterous character depends as per the setting and situation they mirror.

Discovery

The character style I state is rather a blend of discovering multiple existing fragments of the rebel and then meshing them to reproduce something new. It is not a creation nor an imitation but a reflection of my takes and insights of how I witnessed my childhood and teenage years concentrated into a narration style. What started as a question to AI, that was the primary research tool but never a writing assistant, became a path of self-realisation. As each of the upcoming 23 points unfolded, a monument of memories was constructed to depict these thoughts and ideas collectively. It seemed as if I was reciting my lightbulb moments back to back. There was a euphoria in uncovering this. My personality seeps very much into this archetype as a result.

Dedication

I thank my mentor Vinay sir for changing my perspective of the arts and introducing a flexible mindset to the field.

I thank my mentor Jaya ma'am for teaching me the importance of communication via language.

I thank my mentor Srabani ma'am for facilitating the growth of my writing.

I thank my mentor Soumen sir for training me in rigorous and relentless practice in order to overcome obstacles.

I thank my mentor Bincee ma'am for ensuring I have a platform where my voice can be heard.

I thank my mentor Shweta ma'am for permitting me to share my knowledge of history with eagerness openly.

I thank my mentor Lokesh sir for sparking the visualisation element in my creativity.

I thank my mentor Lakshmi ma'am for inculcating a resilience to grasp new topics regardless of difficulty.

I thank my mentor Devi ma'am for showing me how accessibility via presentation eases the consumption of data.

I thank my mentor Paneesh sir for empowering me to take initiative.

I thank my mentor Aratrika ma'am for conversing and expanding my concepts of art through natural terminologies.

I thank my mentor Sakshi ma'am for directing my curiosity to areas of intrigue and advising my articulation of the human psyche.

I thank my mentor Noufal sir for leading by example on how historic pace can be utilised for greater causes.

My heartfelt gratitude to all of you whom I am proud to call my teachers.

PHRASE WEB

The framework I set for appropriately developing the archetype is PHRASE WEB, an acronym standing for:

Prioritising
Humanity
Rights
And Sincerity
Excel

Whilst Establishing Brilliance

This stands and means that the archetype is not untouchable but can seem mythical due to the importance they give towards their task at hand. Maintaining these traits despite at times faltering makes the hidden rebel a force of nature as they are a resultant product of their given environment. The following points elaborate in detail how to achieve a narrative featuring the archetype.

Archetype

1)Imperfection:

The rebel must embody flawed characteristics such as having aggression in excess or being too humble. These mistakes within the archetype are crucial for rooting it in reality. Their reactions will define them, be it dialogue or physical movements. Conversation by and between hidden rebels and characters should be written light at first and then edited with intensity. Only then does the cream come at the top. My term for this is milking. Dialogue should come like milk from a cow's udder and if forced too much, the kick coming from the milk comes instead from the cow. Hence, making them vulnerable if required enhances the realism. This also prevents the invincible, superhuman and godly critiques from coming.

2)Unisex:

The rebel is not gender-based.This allows for the archetype to embody various forms.Personality triumphs physique and that is instrumental to the core idea of this archetype;stereotypes must be crossed and limits are only drawn ethically by the individual writing the narrative.Humans have hearts and being human is expressing that whilst being true to yourself.That is a hidden rebel.

3)Philosophy Blend:

When conceiving such a character within this framework as a rebel,4 foundational philosophies that overlap by their traits in humanism have key roles to play from some of their principles:

A-Dharma:Growth by prospering through fulfilling duty specifies the character's targets.

B-Stoicism:Tolerance of the external and control of self are essential for avoiding normalising reactivity of the characters.

C-Aristotelianism: Reasoned virtuous action justifies and signals the moral stance of the rebel as a person with sensibility.

D-Renaissance: The excellence in independence must be underlined in order to emphasise that the hidden rebel, even if dependent, can remain alive by themselves.

These 4 philosophies when meshed by their foundations broaden the horizon for a protagonist with courtesy and danger through their mastery of the skillsets they possess like every human does without being occupation or physique dependent.

4) Mythological Traits:

The following features are all required for the archetype to be deemed a hidden rebel. How much of each quality will vary as per the skillsets and field of the character. Note that these are embodied morals which influenced this archetype and not deity interpretations.

Indra's observation-Patience in analysis before serious action

Krishna's intervention-Coordinated and timed guidance

Rama's righteousness-Commitment to duty that births a courage in the face of adversity

Hanuman's devotion-The loyalty and compassion shown to a friend or an ally must be accepting

Vishnu's management-Merging their inner and outer world strengthens the character's command by their presence

Brahma's facilitation-Experimenting and testing through trials of effort as well as enduring both attachment and detachment towards their creation

Shiva's destruction-To eliminate what is unnecessary and harmful to who they stand for

Ganesha's wisdom-They need not be knowing everything but must be willing to learn as that increases and solidifies their success

Shakti's power-This changes according to where they top as a specialised asset and grounds them as a reckoning force due to their repeated practice of talent

A hidden rebel must harness all of these because they encapsulate what makes a human distinct from other living beings.

5)Humanity Above Institutions:

The rebel must work in a system and birthing change within it shall happen as they work for humane interests.This may be presented as selfishness as a common flaw but that does not direct their goal to solely benefit them.Egoistic does not mean the same as egotistic.This is critical in reinforcing and bridging the inner and outer conflicts in terms of plots and subplots that the narrative may have.

6)Path And Steps:

Every animal is born free but only restricts themselves as according to their frame and views of the world that they face. A wolf can be maniacal if raised harsh but can also become a supporter if raised lovingly. The same applies to plants. Environments shape the freedom. In that process whilst we all walk freely, our major decisions are out of our will. These are normally large steps a character takes. The hidden rebel's deeds must be willing and never forced but complementary to the path they take. Any turmoil or achievement must only forward the plot or heighten the motives but never lead to stagnation because the hidden rebel is a catalyst for the forward positive reaction in the sense they reduce the negative energy to activate a change quicker to direct action at a greater velocity. They are not used up as they will reform. In chemistry, AlCl_3 is one such catalyst that reforms whilst being a catalyst for forming the compound chlorobenzene from Cl_2 and benzene. The hidden rebel is like that, at times charged but in the end balanced and reformed by their process.

7)Stages:

The hidden rebel is also a combination of 6 existing rebel archetypes. The hidden rebel, therefore, is at least once shown as each of the following.

i)Anarchist-Disregard to the damage on the opposition ii)Civil-They obey rules whilst causing disruption iii)Noble-Fighting for a collective as a root cause for their clashing ideals iv)Misfit-Background holds great value to have self-esteem and prove themselves

v)Shadow-Silence is one of the most important comrades to the rebel vi)Maverick-Replacing a current system in some manner must be done in order to cherish the rebel's labour

The full circle display of all of these archetypes makes the rebel a worthy competitor.

Dynamics

8)Storm Cycle

The water cycle is known to mankind as one of the most fundamental processes of nature that is important for our survival. The below diagram shows an interpretation of the very cycle but more inclined towards the presentation of the narration.

This may seem like a loop but in that process there is much more substance than at mere view.I explain each phase as follows:

Water Evaporation-The rebel must gather existing information.

Cloud Formation-The rebel must compile and order that information.

Particle Friction-The rebel must start rigorously testing that information.

Early Gusts-The rebel must release their views lightly.

Thunderous Lightning-The rebel must battle with perseverance.

Gentle Rain-The rebel must earn fruits of labour.

Clear Skies-The rebel must continue their journey.

Notice how I did not number these phases.They are connected through the fact that each phase builds a story's tension. The narration focus, therefore, is not what, but where, when and how. It is okay to present the lightning first or the rain last, even showing no fruits after tremendous lightning since even that reflects a numerical truth of reality. That clusters emotions and also roots the character back to their creator's and mainly audience's realm. Perfection is only overshadowed by proof of process because despite ideals craving the best, we are also satisfied with a percentage of progression sometimes. The hidden rebel is like a storm for that very reason. Danger is in duration of depiction with depth that determines the durability of the rebel.

9) Duty Mastery vs Desire Slavery:

The rebel protagonists must always demonstrate a conviction to their duties in whatever they do whereas antagonists succumb to the desires they have. If mastery rules and slavery is degrading in our reality, in this framework that is meant to reflect reality the same must be done. It is not about fitting but convincing. Once again the how matters more than what.

10)Mutualistic Growth:

Inherited and acquired are the two types of traits a creature can possess. Inherited traits are shaped by the past of the character. Acquired traits are shaped by the present environment however. As time moves on, so does the setting, hence, therefore that should also impact the rebel's growth and mode of action. If a barren land at the start of a story ends up decorated with fauna, an initially angry rebel can be shown calm and more educated by the lessons he learnt along the way at the end without sacrificing any of his inherited traits. That makes the rebel honest not only to himself throughout the tale but also to the surroundings.

Tactics

11)Sincerity+Hard Work=Experience:

In my opinion, the work done wholeheartedly despite great difficulties echoes within a person for a long time. For a hidden rebel to truly survive in harsh climates, they must endure with an optimism of brighter days regardless of their nights' darkness. This also makes sure that the work done by the rebel remains credible for other characters to vouch for the rebel earning both trust and status.

12)Power=Rate Of Work Done:

In physics, " $Power = \frac{Work\ Done}{Time}$ " is a known equation for power. If a character must be deemed powerful, especially the rebel, their work must be highly impactful in short durations. This proves their proficiency in their field stands at the highest level. If the rate of work done is maximised under minimised timing, then optimisation is at hand, hence, acts as merit.

13)Timing Trio:

3 common techniques can be used to highlight an event in the past,present or future of the main plot.

Callback-Referencing previous events.

Emphasis-Accentuating the current.

Foreshadowing-Indicating the upcoming.

The tension built by these can be used to bubble,boil and simmer the dramatic ambience of a situation respectively.Usage of them not only hooks audiences but conceives an anticipation they may unknowingly consume for thrill.

14)S Trio:

3 effects a writer may or may not consciously use are important as a personal critique of the story as well.

Satisfaction-"The story is fulfilling."

Shock-"The story raises eyes."

Sequel-longing-"The story can continue."

The first is judging whether you consider the story complete. The proceeding judges whether the substance feels refreshing. The last judges whether the story is worth consuming again. These 3 help ease the editing process primarily.

15)I Trio:

The next 3 are important for editing but also for believing in yourself in writing the story.

Instinct-The gravity.

Intuition-The drive.

Intellect-The core.

This makes sure what you say is attractive and primarily true to your audience, the story and yourself respectively.

Conditions

16)Gray Shades:

*Love → Rise Of The Protagonist = Downfall Of The Antagonist

Hate → Antagonist Winning = Protagonist Failing

If success matters for the protagonist, the antagonist must fail with the audience at least internally cursing their evil methods. This is a clearance and license for the protagonist to also be a gray shade character. The antagonist must be worth every insult to a creature of inhumane features even more than any cheer towards the protagonist attaining glory in their pursuits. This is another how over what focus that justifies any action leaning morally towards the protagonist's goal.

17)Security Alignment:

Intellect is the fuel for sparks to catch onto and intuition oxidizes the resultant flame that becomes a wildfire breathing under instinct. Instinct is the guard, intuition is the monument and intellect is the showcase. What intellect builds and intuition hosts, instinct protects. This condition is mainly for the writer to harness the feelings of their characters and trust the story through these tests. All 3 must be done simultaneously and practice of this technique ensures both emotions and thoughts merge well.

18)STEAM Integration:

STEAM stands for Science, Technology, Engineering, Arts and Mathematics. Why and how does this philosophy create the hidden rebel in any way? The former is answered by the simple reason that the hidden rebel is placed in fictional scenarios in realistic environments, not fantasy. The five fields of study mentioned are instrumental in daily life. Incorporating these further ground the hidden rebel as a flawed human being with good-hearted ambitions. The latter question of how is illustrated by the way the hidden rebel uses known techniques that are common to deal with both simple and complex problems. This in turn suffocates the thought of alienating the rebel as what they offer is present in reality already.

Immersion

19)Volume And Weight:

Volume is what you add to the story to draw an audience into the narrative. It will vary across the story demanding as much attention as required per moment. Weight is what you maintain throughout the story as a constant that makes an audience want to return to the same story, places and characters. These two depend on the projection of the writer's aim for the plot in terms of standing and sustaining multiple times of consumption.

20)Psychology Of Environment:

The following 3 psychologists' works must be used to influence the environments of a hidden rebel's story in a minor way at least.

Sigmund Freud-The setting of origin for the rebellion to start must be defining for their later conscious actions.

Alfred Adler-The society of the rebel must stand either by or against them or end up changing as an outcome of successful rebellion.

Carl Jung-The surroundings the rebel finds themselves in must cater to a close to complete,if not,complete human experience in the sense that they have the choices to communicate any emotion without hesitation including becoming inhumane with their own moral inculcations forcing them to not choose a villainous path.

Conflict thrives in such high stake environments just like in reality.For example,the very forests we get certain foods from are home to toxic animals that can kill us.If we can speak our truth via environment and commit to the story,it is impossible to not give an average hidden rebel narrative.

21)Development Of Setting:

This also circles back to the I trio.Create what you know by your intellect,it will complement the plot by intuition and by instinct it guides the rebel to reach their end position. This can be a great way to check for how well the writer feels about the setting for the narrative atmosphere.

22)PESTELI+Psychology:

This, just like the STEAM philosophy, roots the rebel but in reality thematically. PESTELI stands for Political, Economical, Social, Technological, Environmental, Legal and Industrial. Any one or multiple of these themes merged with a mandatory stress on the rebel's psychology delivers a dual conflict required to describe the purpose of the hidden rebel's journey. Inner battles are harder than the greatest external wars.

23)Potboiler:

Combining all the previous points in at least small fractions packages and presents a potent and promising potboiler.

Conclusion

The projection of an artist stands only if the artist stands by, for and of their own artistic projection. I mean: Salim-Javed stood by their words and even wrote their names for credits when no one cared about screenwriters; legendary hip-hop MCs never chased fame and fortune but really loved their craft and cherished that joy, and great thinkers always contributed to a greater good, be it Ramanujan through maths, Tagore through poetry or Galileo through science. It's not about reception for them but getting their point across. Criticism can only delay the reward of a creation but cannot deny the rise of the creator. Art is both a supply of knowledge and a demand to question, a reflection and an image, a source of solace and a weapon of vision.

A quote by Karl Marx really reminds me of humanity's nature which is, "To be radical is to grasp things by the root." We may chase the shine of gold but we have the dare of silver. Our relentlessness is a thirst for uncovering and creating from the existing. In order to attain powers we root them. No skyscraper is not made up of natural composition. The same follows for PHRASE WEB. It is a laugh, a cry and a roar in the face of artificial synthesis trying to hide from its organic ancestry. Fiction can be heightening but equally submerges and sinks into the consumer's consciousness because we as humans aspire to be superior in silence and is at times shown but also want to maintain an ethically correct belief system. This is the freedom the hidden rebel archetype provides as by following all these points, a story of matter and a release of tension can be reviewed. This also is necessary for advocating a diversity of thoughts globally converging on the principles of humanism that modern society may not lack but does not celebrate as it must. I guarantee that this would propel the human race farther than before. My heartfelt thanks for reading this far.
